The Most Important Project You'll Ever Plan

Retirement. It is the “golden egg” many pursue to end a successful career. Statistically speaking, the baby boomer generation is one of the largest segments of the U.S. population, and will continue to grow over the next 20 years as increasing numbers of boomers will retire each year.

I, like many of my cohorts, are eyeing retirement with both excitement and anticipation for the next phase in life, one that will open up more time for doing more of what we love. My 20-plus-year career in project management has provided me with multiple learning opportunities and introduced me to countless people who have enriched my life both personally and professionally.

More recently, the introduction and adoption of artificial intelligence has and will continue to be a game-changer in our profession as more PMs adapt and apply AI to project management processes. I for one am torn, as I'd like to experience the shift in this new and innovative tool to manage projects, yet my eye is on retirement in the not-so-distant future.

One thing many of us neglect to think about with any intentionality is our retirement years. We spend our time moving through our careers and personal lives, planning and managing our retirement accounts, thinking about downsizing our living spaces, even planning how to downsize and adjust our budgets to our (likely lower) retirement income.

Rarely do we think about retirement as one of the biggest events in our life, nor do we adequately plan for it. Three years ago, I decided I would retire in May 2024. That date has come and gone. While I am working a reduced schedule, I am still active in my PM role both at work and within my local PMI chapter. I let my retirement date pass because I realized I was not ready to retire!

So, how do we prepare for retirement? I believe we prepare in the same way we plan and manage for any other big event in our life. I believe retirement is one of the most important projects we will ever undertake, and a fruitful and enjoyable retirement is dependent upon thoughtful planning and execution.
